Background: Hurricane Katrina is believed to have been one of the most destructive hurricanes in recent United States history. On 25 August 2005, Katrina crossed southern Florida as a Category-1 storm on the Saffir Simpson Scale, entered the Gulf of Mexico, and then hit the U.S. Gulf Coast on 29 August as a Category-4 storm with 140 mile per hour winds. Alabama, Louisiana, and Mississippi were affected. Katrina produced catastrophic damage and hundreds of casualties in New Orleans, Louisiana, and along the Mississippi gulf coasts. Additional casualties occurred in Alabama, Georgia, and southern Florida. The extent of the physical and human devastation is still unfolding. However, 90,000 square miles of land have been declared a disaster area.

Latest Human Toll: As of 11 September 2005, the Hurricane Katrina death toll stood at a little over 400, the majority of which occurred in Louisiana and Mississippi.
