The Situation

On 23 February 2005, a store of ammunition at a military depot exploded in Juba in southern Sudan. The blast killed 31 people and wounded another 150 persons while a number remained unaccounted for. An official statement from the government of Sudan attributed the explosion to high temperatures.

The explosion and the ensuing fire extensively damaged and burnt 900 tukuls (local housing units) in a nearby residential area. The Customs Market, the second largest market in the area, was also completely gutted, disrupting the livelihoods of thousands of people who depend on the market.

Red Cross and Red Crescent action

A team from the Sudanese Red Crescent¹, the Netherlands Red Cross and ICRC was among the first to respond to the disaster; they provided first aid and ambulance services, evacuated the wounded to Juba hospital and removed the dead bodies.

The Sudanese Red Crescent distributed non-food items to the affected families on 26 March, in collaboration with ICRC, UNICEF and other organizations. WFP and the local authorities have distributed food; local authorities are also providing water through trucking services.

The national society conducted an assessment to determine the extent of damage and the immediate needs of the affected population.

The Federation has allocated CHF 200,000 from its Disaster Relief Emergency Fund (DREF) to enable the Sudanese Red Crescent to respond to the immediate needs of the affected population. The regional delegation is working closely with the Sudan delegation and the Sudanese Red Crescent to monitor the situation and decide future action.

The needs

Among the critical needs identified by the assessment conducted by the Sudanese Red Crescent are shelter, water, and food and non-food items. Approximately 660 households have been affected by the explosion; over 3,000 people are homeless after losing their homes, household property and food reserves to the fire.

There is an urgent need to provide building material to renovate the burnt houses, particularly since the rains are expected to start in April. Most of the walls of the tukuls are still standing but their grass thatched roofs and wooden doors were all burnt down.

The devastation from the explosion has exacerbated the hardship facing the town which suffers from high levels of poverty and acute water shortage. The affected families are currently being supported by their extended family members and neighbours; this is bound to increase the pressure on host families.

The proposed operation

Objective:

To renovate and reconstruct 900 tukuls through the provision of local building materials to the affected households.

Budget outline
